

FAST COMPANY

HAIM Has “Something To Tell You” Via Guitar Solo: This Week In Music

These are the songs we recommend for your Productivity Playlist, volume eight.

Welcome back for installment number eight! Just a reminder about what this is: My colleagues and I have taken it upon ourselves to curate the best new tracks that dropped this week—the point being to save you time scrolling through Apple Music or Spotify for fresh music, and to make you more productive. Just a heads up I will be out next week, so there will be no playlist updated until I am back! See you in two weeks, playlisters.

TRACK 5. JOYWAVE – “GOING TO A PLACE”

Rock outfit Joywave’s upcoming album Content is due at the end of July, but they’ve been releasing singles over the past couple of weeks. Today, they’ve debuted “Going To A Place,” a nice, subtle indie rock track that’s the perfect ending to this week’s playlist. The main thing I always love about Joywave’s songs is the programming and keys they layer on top of their tracks. I recommend checking out Joywave’s 2016 album SWISH for a fun 30-minute “layered” track.

