

August 4, 2019

4. Scarypoolparty is a winner in our books

Although Alejandro Aranda, also known as Scarypoolparty, was the runner-up on this past season of "American Idol," he is the winner in our books and will likely join the Adam Lamberts of the world as runner-ups who go on to have more successful careers than their season's respective winner.

Scarypoolparty took a scary dive into the deep end during his season by performing seven original songs during his time on "Idol," a move which is often discouraged by judges. Aranda believed in himself and his abilities as a songwriter, and his work took him all the way to the end, proving that he's much more than a guy with a great voice.

Already finding himself at one of the biggest music festivals in the world, Aranda rose to the occasion on Saturday. Alejandro definitely had more rock in his sound under his Scarypoolparty moniker, but his artistry stood out on the live stage as well as it did on the "Idol" stage.